

REAL ROMANCE OF ROYAL PAIR

Birth of Bonapartist Heir Recalls Love Match of Victor and Clementine.

PRINCESS A PRISONER

Belgian King Leopold Held Daughter Six Years to Prevent Marriage to Napoleon.

An heir has been born to the official pretender to the throne of France, the Bonapartist party is rejoicing over the arrival of a prince imperial, and the mother of the little prince, who was Princess Clementine of Belgium, declares she is the happiest woman in the world. She has prayed for a son, and now the son is born.

It was a real royal romance, that of Prince Victor Napoleon and the Belgian princess. For six years the two waited for each other; for old King Leopold, the father of the princess, forbade their marriage. The mere prospect of it helped to embitter his last days, and even on his deathbed he wailed that his youngest daughter again the fatal prompting of her heart and fancy. He reminded her, almost with his expiring breath, of the Bourbon blood in her veins, of the position of her fiancé as the undisputed head of the Bonapartist family, and of the irreconcilable feud between the two sets of pretenders to sovereignty in France—the royalist and imperialist.

The engagement between the princess and the pretender to the hypothetical throne of the French was a somewhat romantic one. For twenty-four years, the chief of the Bonapartists had lived in Brussels. His life, to outward appearance, was of somewhat morose resignation. He did not plot in his great house on the Avenue Louise, but neither did he show contentment with his lot.

Try at "Paper Chase."

Brussels is a comparatively small city, but the first inkling of the fact that the prince and the princess were attentive was given at one of the horseback paper chases, which are among the favorite recreations of Brussels society. At this paper chase Prince Victor was victorious, and Princess Clementine attached the trophy, a bunch of ribbons, to his coat. Her act appeared significant. At once the engagement was declared to be certain.

Shortly after this Prince Victor drove to the great royal palace in Brussels to ask the old king for the hand of his daughter. And now the subtle genius of the crafty old monarch displayed itself in all its power. Receiving the French pretender with the courteous deference in his manner could assume, the wily king professed his perfect willingness to accept the prince for a son-in-law. "But since the French republic had raised objections, Leopold must forbid the ban," Princess Clementine had intimated a purpose to avail herself of her legal advantage of being thirty-two years old by marrying her lover. In that event, Leopold assured the pretender, he should be put to the painful necessity of disowning Clementine as he had disowned his two other daughters. It was of the utmost consequence to the Belgian sovereign to head of the Congo State to maintain friendly relations with the foreign office in Paris. The safety of Belgium itself depended upon French good will.

King Laughs at Pretender.

When the Bonapartist pretender, after listening to this exposition of dynastic diplomacy, ventured to speak of love, Leopold's only reply was said, was "inextinguishable laughter." But the prince had formed an enduring affection for the princess and he was resolved to have his time.

And the grim old king kept his youngest daughter prisoner. It was the time when the moral wreck of the king of the Belgians had filled the world with his scandal. His character, covered in every respect, lost no vigor in the capriciousity of jailer, and the helpless Clementine durst not stir from her room without the prior permission of her inexorable parent. Daily she was summoned to the presence of her father, who put to her the query:

"Will you swear never to see this man?"

The answer of the princess was the sweetest, but the firmest; for she never forgot her sense of duty to her parent, whom she tenderly loved when all the world was filled with loathing for his vices. And the old king who had a wife, hated his sister, hated his two elder daughters, loved jealously, selfishly, his youngest child, the Princess Clementine.

When he came home to Brussels from the dancing girls of Paris, from his sullen junketing on the Riviera, it was she who nursed him back to a kind of health and decency. She drove around with him, and when she was with him the people did not hoot him in the streets. With her, he was a prince, and in every respect, lost no vigor in the capriciousity of jailer, and the helpless Clementine durst not stir from her room without the prior permission of her inexorable parent. Daily she was summoned to the presence of her father, who put to her the query:

always heartily in favor of the marriage, and the bulk of her vast fortune will go to the prince and princess, and eventually to the little prince imperial and his sister. And there are some who believe that Emperor Napoleon IV, as Prince Victor is called by the Bonapartists will some day ascend the throne and that the prince imperial eventually will be Emperor of France.

FRANK TRIAL UNFAIR, DECLARES NEWSPAPER

Atlanta Journal Prints Long Editorial Favoring New Trial for Convicted Man.

VICTIM OF PEOPLE'S FURY

Atlanta, Ga., March 14.—A two-column editorial in the Atlanta Journal asking a new trial for Leon M. Frank, convicted of killing Mary Phagan, is regarded as significant by those interested in the case. The Journal says Frank was not fairly tried and convicted and that his execution under the present sentence would amount to murder.

Frank was a happy man when he read the editorial in his cell. Showing more emotion than he had exhibited at any time before, he exclaimed:

"Thank God! The light seems to be breaking. I have always believed that my appeals for a square deal would not be in vain. The Journal shows just how I was convicted, and the editorial bears out every contention in regard to the trial that has been made by my attorneys."

The Journal says:

"On April 25, 1913, in the city of Atlanta, in a building situated on one of the most crowded thoroughfares, a young girl, just breaking into womanhood, was cruelly and brutally murdered. The crime was enveloped in deepest and most impenetrable mystery.

Public in Fury.

"The very brutality of the crime aroused public indignation to a degree of frenzy almost inconceivable. An irresponsible, drunken negro charged Leo Frank with the crime. He related in minute and nauseating detail the horrible circumstances surrounding the murder. No other victim could be discovered, and in the absence of convincing evidence against anybody else, public fury gradually centered on Frank.

"As time went on, the mystery deepened. There was no satisfactory circumstance indicating that Frank committed the crime, and it required the negro's testimony to furnish even a basis for the accusation. The fact that this horrible crime had been committed, and no other victim could be discovered, was alone sufficient to cause the negro's testimony to be accepted by the public. He would not have been believed under other conditions, but an outraged public demand-

PLANTS THAT ATTRACT DUCKS.
Result of Investigations to Be Published by Government.

What is it that attracts large numbers of ducks, including the far-famed canvasback duck, to certain localities? This is a question which a specialist of the Department of Agriculture has been endeavoring to solve, and the results of his careful investigations now are being printed in a bulletin for free distribution entitled "Five Important Wild-duck Foods."

The presence of certain plants near, or in certain bodies of water, prove to be the cause of the popularity of those localities for the canvasbacks and other ducks. Among these the department's investigator found five to be of great intrinsic value. Though at present of local importance only, all of them could be grown in most parts of the United States, and there is no reason why they should not rank among the staple foods of wild ducks in many places where they are now unknown.
